Sir Percy Cradock, British Ambassador to China, is to become the next special adviser on foreign affairs to Mrs Margaret Phatcher. He will succeed Sir Anthony Parsons in Downing street at the end of the year. Sir Percy is due to retire from the diplomatic service on reaching the age of 60 next month but he will also be retained by the Foreign Office as a deputy undersecretary with special responsi-bility for the negotiations with China over the future of Hongkong. He has conducted the Peking-

When the Labour conference begins to assemble at Brighton at the end of this week many of its members will be looking over their shoulders at the Alliance. Whether Labour continues to be the most challenging opposition to the Government will depend principally upon how Labour conducts itself, not least at Brighton next week. But it will also be much influenced by whether the Alliance looks a

There must be rather more doubt about that after Salford and Harrogate. I am not referring to the conflicting positions of the SDP and the Liberals on joint selection. That kind of power battle should not present insuper-able problems where there is a sufficient community of interests and attitudes.

There is a very considerable community of interests between the two parties. But the policy differences - or rather the differences in the instincts of Liberals and Social Democrats in their approach to policy - may be

Some of these differences were evident in the speeches of Dr Owen and Mr Steel, despite the determination of both men to work closely with each other. At Salford Dr Owen propounded three themes: the need for more competition, for a more active social policy and for a strong defeace policy.

Mr Steel also accords a high priority to social policy, but at Harrogate he rejected reliance upon competition as an economic policy. "Today's Tories", he complained "are fired with the Friedmanite view that human improvement can only be achieved by unrelieved compe-

Dr Owen was seeking to break away from the centrist economic consensus that dominated policymaking in the 1960s and 1970s. Mr Steel, with his faith in stimulating demand and increasing public expenditure, was seeking to restate that consensus

Partners may be on collision course

Perhaps this is the sort of difference which, important though it is, can nonetheless be argued through amicably between partners. The defence issue may be harder to resolve. Dr Owen and Mr Steel gave the strongest of hints that they may be set on a collision course over the deployment of cruise missiles in this country - a conflict which would e a serious matter for the Alliance.

Still more serious is the chasm that exists between Dr Owen and some sections of the Liberal Party in their basic attitudes lowards defence. Even some Liberals who are not unilateralists felt that he went a bit too far : at Harrogate on Saturday in spelling out the hard choices that would have to be made some vears abead.

I believe that criticism to be mistaken in terms both of national and Alliance politics. The strength and courage of his. speech had the mark of tree. leadership that appeals to the country. If he had fudged a bit, perhaps rather more Liberals would have liked him better on .* Saturday.

But it was to avoid having to nake such compromises that the SDP leaders left the Labour Party and they would forfeit public respect if they started to make them now. There can be no future in a quasi-unilateralist Alliance, and Dr Owen was right to make this abundantly clear to the Liberals before there could be any misunderstanding.

Left to themselves, Dr Owen and Mr Steel could probably sort out their differences on defence, as they did before the general election. But will a policy that is sufficiently unequivocal to satisfy Dr Owen be acceptable to the Liberal Party as a whole?

The first test will be whether agreement can be reached in the nt working group that is to be established, in this as in other areas of policy. But the critical question will be wheth sequent Liberal assemblies can be made to swallow whatever ioint policies emerge

Half a million commuters in Kent and Sussex fear they may lose their railway line to London because a Victorian contractor chested when he built the tunnels more than a century ago. The contractor was supposed to line the tunnels, between Tonbridge and Hastings, with three layers of bricks, but when the structure started to deteriorate shortly after the old South-Easters Railway opened it in the 1850s, he was found to have used only one layer.

By then he had gone bankrupt and the railway was short of cash; so instead of enlarging the tunnels, two layers of bricks were added inside, narrowing the openings and forcing on passen-gers, including today's, smaller coaches than elsewhere on Southern Region, with slab sides and cramped seating.

Earlier in the day more than 30,000 students and workers marched through Montevideo to demand freedom in education, an amnesty for political prisoners, and an end to military rule. # The 10 Series copiers. Ready for anything.

Some time ago, Xerox set out to develop a new state of the art. Copiers that would combine the sophistication of the computer age with the durability needed to survive the pace of everyday office life.

We designed copiers that incorporated the very latest technology, and added a few innovations of our own. Then we put them through a course of the toughest tests our engineers could devise.

We ran our 10 Series copiers for months on end, to see how their features stood continual use.

We checked and re-checked every single one of their features. We subjected them to demands no copier would normally be expected to meet.

The result of all this long painstaking research is a range of copiers that are quieter, more advanced, more economical and more reliable than anything we've ever produced before: the Xerox 10 Series of copiers. Briefly here's what they are.

The Xerox 1075 is the pride of the range.

The copier which monitors every copy it produces to give top quality copies every time, at speeds of up to seventy copies per minute.

The 1045 is a more compact modular system with five possible options.

The 1035 represents more advanced technology in a compact copier

And last, but by no means least, the baby of the series, the Xerox 1020. All in all, the Xerox 10 Series of copiers sets new standards of quality and reliability. Which is why when it comes to copying, they make the running.

ongratulations to Schweppes from Pepsi-Cola on the occasion of their bicentenary.

In 1783 Jacob Schweppe perfected the first successful system of commercially carbonating water. Little did he realise that in doing so he founded the soft drinks industry as we know it today. From this small beginning Schweppes is now a world famous name for quality and excellence.

During the last 200 years there have been many notable firsts in the Company's history. The Royal Warrant from Princess Victoria in 1837; the catering contract for the Great Exhibition in 1851; the introduction of the famous Tonic at the time of the British Raj - now the world's leading brand; the launch of Bitter Lemon; the introduction of the famous Slimline range of low-calorie soft drinks.

Another far-reaching decision was taken in 1953 – the signing of a partnership agreement with PepsiCo Inc to bottle and distribute Pepsi-Cola throughout Great Britain. The association of these two beverage companies has proved to be a happy and prosperous one. Schweppes has produced and sold Pepsi-Cola with the same enthusiasm and dedication as befits their reputation as one of the world's leading soft drinks companies.

Schweppes' commitment to increasing sales of Pepsi-Cola culminated in 1982 in their winning the Pepsi-

Cola "Bottler of the Year" award for Northern Europe.

Under the leadership of Managing Director Brian Dice and his team Schweppes are again leading the sales league in this Bicentenary Year of 1983.

PepsiCo salutes this achievement and looks forward to the next 200 years of progress.

In the second extract from his new book on style in the twentieth century, Bevis Hillier analyses the Swinging Sixties, discovers how they got their name and wonders whether they deserved it. It was a time, he writes, when city slickness took over from the previous decade's infatuation with rural motifs, and austerity gave way to planned obsolescence Council of Industrial Design in London. He contributed the Design issue of 1960, which was headed "The Challenge of the Sixties".

"We have just lived through ten modern design", he wrote. "Thanks to the spadework of the 1950s, and 1960s could be a decade of remarkable achievement, given certain conditions." He hoped that those "at the social centre of gravity" in Britain (perhaps those Top People who were alleged to take The Times?) would give a lead, and that the world would begin to look to Britain, not to Scandinavia, Italy or the United States, for leadership in design".

Reilly asked overseas propagandists to "declare a close season for beef-eaters and halberdiers, and to concentrate for a while on our more up-to-date appearances, lest the world should come to look upon us as the Old Curiosity Shop of Europe." As he pointed out, Italy had even more ancient traditions, but it was for her modern work that she was admired and copied.

In the 1960s, Reilly's hopes were to be realized - though not perhaps in the way he had envisaged. Britain shed its fusty, olde worlde image, and "Swing-ing London", with its Beatlemania and Rolling Stones, its Carnaby Street and mini-skirts and Chelsea boutiques, became a world influence on lifestyle and fashion.

The exact origins of the phrase "Swinging London" are lost in the twists of modernity. Some trace them back to the catchphrases of the television comedian Norman Vaughan - "Swinging! . . . Dodgy!" But John Anstey, Editor of the Telegraph Sunday Magazine, believes that Diana Vreeland, that supreme arbiter of fashion, first used the words "swinging" and "London" in the same breath, and that they were first printed together in his magazine (then the Weekend Telegraph) on April 30 1965.

Earlier in 1965, Anstey was staying at the Crillon Hotel, Paris. Miss Vreeland was staying there too, and Unfortunately, Munzig was interested only in the picturesquely archaic aspects of England - bowler hats, guardsmen's uniforms, the odd horsedrawn carriage. But Crosby quoted Vreeland's comment, and the magical phrase recurred in a caption: "The life of the city is the people who live there, the rhythm that pulses through its crowded streets. Compulsively people gravitate to the capital from the provinces and abroad drawn by a kind of telepathy of talent, ideas and action, until the scene explodes - and London is a swinging city." Crosby described, though Munzig did not photograph, the institutions of Swinging London: the nightclub Annabel's, Mary Quant's boutique in Chelsea, the Beatles, and Carnaby Street.

Three weeks later, a reporter from Time magazine came to see John Anstey. She had been sent to write a cover story about the wonderful new Swinging London. The Time article gave Swinging London international recognition. London was "where it was

Speak as you

Although science is still not quite sure why there are so many heart attacks today, I am convinced it is because so many people let themselves get upset over the misuse of the English language. Let someone say disinterested when he should have said uninterested, or figure for flout, and the air becomes heavy with the sound of apoplectic custodians of English falling dead on the pavement. I myself have gone through heavy bouts of indignation, especially over the misuse of the word refute, but I am now beginning to react tranquilly to linguistic crimes, and pass by on the other side like a think this is partly because whenever per ger things wrong they do know at least what they mean, and we who are listening also know exactly what they mean. We go past the wrong expression and get to the right meaning. Sometimes, in fact, we do not even realize the usage has been wrong.

The other day I spotted a sign outside a car showroom reading: "Try it for two months, or your money back." It was quite obvious what was meant. Test drive a car. Keep it for two months. Then, if you don't like it, get your money back.

But that was not what the sign said: The sign said: Try a car for two months OR get your money back. In other words, if you test drive a car from us, you will not under any circumstances get your money back - one or the other but not both. Whether this was a very clever offer on the part of the garage, or merely another piece of grievous bodily harm on the English language, it is certain that most passers by would not take it to mean what it really says.

Many years ago I had a schoolmaster who tried to alert us to this kind of forked tongue phraseology. He gave us a set of sentences and asked us to spot the logical fallacy contained in each. (He might well have been preparing us for a world dominated by advertising.) At this remote period in time I can only remember three of them, as

L. Do not ruin your clothes at home. Let the Acme Laundry do it for you. 2. I am not superstitious at all - I always walk under ladders.

3. This is a book you must not fail to miss. It was No 2 that gave me the most trouble. I simply couldn't see why there was anything superstitions about walking under ladders. The master eventually had to point out to me that if the man always insisted on doing so, then he was ipso facto superstitious. Then he had to explain to me what ipso facto means. Yes, quite a lively education, especially as we were meant to be doing algebra at the time.

don't want to seem ungrateful after all these years, but it was the same teacher who told me that the word unique had to be used very carefully. A thing was either unique or it wasn't, he proclaimed, which made sense. There was no halfway stage. Therefore it was quite wrong to say that something was nearly unique or even utterly unique.

I now think he was wrong. If, for instance, there are two orchids of a certain variety left while the other is flourishing then the flourishing, one is on the verge of being unique. It is therefore almost unique. I am solid on this one. If I had an executive, it would be solid with me on this one.

One can equally well say that a person is either in Scotland or not in Scotland - there are no two ways about it. But equally, a man living in Carlisle could truthfully be said to be almost in Scotland, and so on I therefore would like to say at this late stage in my education that I condemn the stuff we were taught about unique as a heresy.

once even had a teacher who confessed that they could be wrong. He was a German teacher, and had in his class a boy called Ramsay who had lived throughout Europe and knew most of the languages to be found there. One day he asked the teacher a searching question about German grammar, and the teacher said: "Ramsay, if you don't know then I am not likely to know. You are much better at German than I am."

was lucky to meet a teacher who owned up so blithely to inadequacy. But then I suppose he was almost unique.

 Miniatorization The philosophy of "Small is Beautiful" came in during the 1960s, though that parrotable phrase had not yet been popularized by Robert Schumacher's book. People were moving out of old semi-detached villas into "little boxes made of ticky-tacky", as Malvina Reynolds's satirical song put it. In 1960 Max Braun's pocket-sized combined radio and record-player (only 9x6x2in when the two parts were coupled together for carrying) was exhibited at the Milan Triennale, alongside a portable, battery-operated television receiver. True, there was a production in Budapest last Christmas where this feline extravaganza was performed to taped music within the confines of a crumbling theatre, but the version that opened in the Theater an der Wien in Vienna on Saturday was remarkable for two main developments: first Gillian Lynne is here (in place of Trevor Nunn) as the director as well as the original choreographer, and secondly Cats is being performed for the first time within the confines of a conventional proscenium arch.

A few fairy lights and old Coke cans have been tastefully hung around the forestage area by David Hersey and John Napier, but there is (as one local observer noted) not a lot of messing about you can do with the theatre where Beethoven himself. New Art at the Tate and New Sculpture at the Fine Art Society? On the face of it, it sounds improbable, and of course on closer inspection the New Sculpture proves to be new only by one of those lovable quirks of the English language. which still calls a bridge or a college new because it was so in 1503, and still calls our present theatrical establishment "the New Drama" because that is what it was almost 30 years ago. The sculpture here in question was new (or newish) in 1894, when Edmund Gosse coined the phrase in an influential series of articles about what was then going on in Britain. And, if the has been either as a label for a pigeonhole in which a whole school of artists could be conveniently forgotten, or with heavily ironic overtones as the art historian using it looked longingly over to contemporary France.

The second reaction, be it said at once, is both understandable and unfair. True, none of the sculptors on show at the Fine Art Society until October 14 was exactly a Rodin. But, then, few others were. And the British artists stand up very respectably to comparison with the Frenchmen who clustered under Rodin's wing. If we underestimate their quality and misconstrue their purposes, in many respects Gosse is to blame, because, as Susan Beattle points out in her admirable book The New Sculpture, which ac-companies the exhibition (Yale University Press, £30), he did not take his definition of his subject back far enough. hideously involved in commerce, and tended to suggest that the movement had already passed its peak at the time of writing. Dr Beattie firmly puts Gosse in his place: the line of development from Stevens through Alfred Gilbert is clear, but we have too readily overlooked other important figures such as Hamo Thornycrost (recently given a small show of his own in Leeds), George Frampton, Harry Bates and Goscombe John (who benefitted from Weishness with a major show at the National Museum of Wales in

Two things were really distinctive about this group of sculptors in relation to their predecessors: their very vital concern with integrating sculpture into building which helped to bring about a minor revolution in British archite and their equal determination to bring sculpture into the home by the dissemination of comfortably sized domestic statueties. Naturally the emphasis of the show is largely on the latter line of activity. And one cannot but be struck by the extraordinary understanding shown by most of these artists in the essential matter of scale: these small works never seem like big works arbitrarily reduced. I am inclined to think that Gilbert still emerges as the giant of the group, but the Framptons, such as his evocations of Arthurian ladies in relief. and, like La Belle Isoude, in the round are quite lovely, there are clearly some women : sculptors - to be discovered, such as L Gwendolin Williams, and the short-lived Harry Bates is, of them all, perhaps the most completely and most unfairly forgotten.

It can hardly be said that the three painters featured in the loan exhibition from the Saar, rather misleadingly called German Impressionism and Expressionism, at Leinster Fine Art in Bayswater until October 24, are forgotten in this country, fairly or unfairly, since they have never had much chance to be remembered. Max Slevogt is slightly known here. partly because of his famous set of Gesichte lithographs, which represent his appalled response to the First World War. But few will even have heard of Albert Weisgerber, killed in that same war in 1915, or of Hans Purmann. This is because, despite the show's ritle, they were all very definitely in the impressionist tradition, and therefore got rather left out when international attention was excited by their Expressionist contemporaries. But clearly our ignorance has been our loss. Even if none of them is likely to emerge from the shadows as a neglected master, they are all fluent and accomplished in the traditional observers' genres of landscape, still-life and the nude: Weisser- ber's several groups of nudes, male or female, disporting themselves in woods or water are particularly fotching and idyllic.

The show of Canadian Landscape at Canada House Cultural Centre Gallery comparable delights. That is to say, the styles and approaches of the 33 painters bown, dating from the Group of Seven, formed in 1920, onwards, are naturally very different from the earlier Germans, d indeed from one another. And yet the feeling is rather the same: a series of recognizably local variations on international themes, a number of unfamiliar names who for one reason or another have failed to travel outside their native lands (the best-known painters here are Riopelle, whose free-form abstractions are suggested to be landscape-based, and Emily Carr, the western romanic who was given a show of her own in this same gallery a little while back), a lot of agreeable painting which no one, not even a proud compatriot, is going to claim as major. At Canada House one can sense too the abiding Canadian problem of national identity - and strangely enough, despite the multiplicity of styles and influences, something recognizably Canadian does seem to come through.

Meanwhile, I have been struck by three unassuming shows of living British painters, one of them very young, one of them almost wilfully obscu them almost withilly obscure, all working happily in a reality-based tradition, though each makes of the representational approach something distinctively his own. The established painter of the three is Graham Dean, whose latest works are on ar the Nicholas Treadwell Gallery until October 8: Dean began his visible career as a photo-realist, and he is still interested in the photographic side of art, as his strange wideo Any Special Peculiarities attests. But it also shows how far he has moved from simple transcription: here we see, one by one, the photographic bases for a series of watercolours with the same title, each a fantastic, funny or sinister variation on the self-portrait, but reminding us in their freedom, case and confidence what a master of the difficult and unfashionable medium Dean is. The rest of the paintings seem to me most effective when they are nearest to the same technique, though, like the panor amas of naked, Basking Bodies, in acrylic smudged to watery fluency and sponta-

Every picture may tell a story, but not every story can sell a picture. The story attached to the paintings of John A. Caldas, at Graham Dowling Contemporary Art (formerly the Off Centre Gallery). Shillingford Street, Islington, unti October 15, is decidedly curious. Caldas, now 45, has never been exhibited in London before, and for the last decade has lived as a recluse, having nothing to do with the art world, seeing little other art and showing his own to no one. In this selection of work from that time, one can see him trying on different masks, particularly in the large oils: symbolistic, expressionistic, sometimes approaching the kitchen-sink realism of the Bratby era, sometimes achieving the neurotic intensity of a latter-day Munch, they give one the impression that Caldas might well be someone, but that he himself does not quite know who that someone is. There is no doubt at all about the drawings, however, whether in monochrome or colour, occasionally, in the low-life evocations, there is a bint of likeness to Grosz, but clearly Caldas knows here exactly what he is doing, and is iably his own man

Rod Judkius, at the Thumb Gallery, D'Arblay Street, until October 7, is very young, just out of the Royal College, but he has already achieved an immediately recognizable quality: his contribution to Tate's Summertime show leapt off the wall at you amid a mass of amiable, amateur mediocrity. More impressive, there does not seem to be any trickery involved: his art is distinctive not because of cunningly manipulted mannerisms, but because of a genuine oddity of vision. He specializes in images of a very modern kind of urban desolation: the melancoly of the fly-blown shopping precinct, th windswept pedestrian piazza, the weeping concrete blocks. His people, all curiously proportioned, seem to be lost in a surrealist dream: can anything shock them into free association, or are they shut up for ever in their own private worlds? Judkins also draws beautifully, with absolute sureness about what he wants to do. We shall surely be hearing

Another brilliantly assured, musically puzzling recital from Cecile. Ousset: who else can pound Ravel's Alborada del gracioso with as much tumultous exhilaration, drawing sounds of such depth and beauty from the piano, and yet seem to leave the content

The mongoose tales continue. Peter Wilkins, formerly of the Colonial Civil Service, writes from Banbury of his love for Millicent in Sierra Leone about 50 years ago. On the eve of President Mitterrand's speech to the UN, Diana Geddes looks at the strains imposed

independent foreign policy

Paris
Probably not since the Algerian War more than 20 years ago has France been so widely active and visible on the world stage: nearly 10,000 French troops poised on the brink of war in Lebanon and Chad; another 17,000 scattered round the world protecting French interests in the Pacific, the Indian Ocean, and Africa: French support of left-wing regimes such as Nicaragua's in Central America, in direct conflict with US interests; increasing in-leading role in Europe, often in conflict with British interests.

Wherever there is action, you can be sure that France will want to be out there in the forefront having her

Foreign policy is one of President Mitterrand's passions. Throughout his political career, he has taken an active interest in world affairs, travelling widely and making contacts, and some friends, with people who are now leading figures in their own countries. He may be a relatively new face to the international scene, but he is not a new boy to the subject.

As always under the Fifth Republic, France's foreign policy is first and foremost the President's policy.

The most striking thing about the present government's foreign policy is its continuity with the past. Francois Mitterrand has the same view as Charles de Gaulle, for example, of France's historic greatness. Its responsibilities, and its quasi-messianic mission in the world

France is a world power if only by virtue of its far-flung possessions and former colonies: : five "departments" directly ruled from Paris, in Latin America, the Indian Ocean, North America, and the West Indies: five overseas territories or colonies and more than 20 former colonies and mandated territories mainly in Africa, with which it still maintains close ties, including often a military presence.

The relative lack of change in the

The relative lack of change in the main themes of France's foreign policy under the Socialists is underlined by the broad national consensus on that area alone of the government's activities. On the whole, the opposition has found little of substance to criticize, though the Gaullist Party has recently been trying to put the boot in over Lebanon and Chad, complaining both of too little action by the Government and too much involvement. But even where there has been criticism, the opposition has usually failed to come up with a better alternative solution.

Those close to the President insist that his foreign policy is first and foremost French rather than socialist – designed to serve national interests rather than particular ideology. They cite the government's steadfast stand against the USSR (following a slight flirtation under President Giscard), as an example of this. They claim, indeed, that France maintains a tougher stance toward Moscow than any other Western nation, as demonstrated by such things as its unwavering support for the deployment of US missiles in Europe in the event of a failure of the Geneva negotiations, its refusal to allow the French nuclear force to be taken into account in those talks, and its bold expulsion of 47 Soviet spies last spring.

The French attitude toward the South Korean jet disaster has made some people wonder whether there has not now been a shift in that policy, however. France has been sharply criticized for refusing to take part in a boycott of flights to the Soviet Union and for going ahead with the visit by Andrei Gromyko, the Foreign Minister – the first by a high-ranking Soviet official since it high-ranking soviet official

The French deny this. They say they consider boycotts and embargoes in general to be ineffective and even absurd in so far as they sometimes actually help the Soviet government, particularly when the West is seen to be in disarray over what measures to take. Furthermore, they point out that the US appears to advocate embargoes and boycotts only when it does not directly affect its own interests.

As for the influence of the communists, even the opposition parties have to admit that other than the latest incident over the South Korean jet, they seem to have had no effect on French foreign policy, despite outspoken Communist Party opposition to the government's stance on Euromissiles, and increasing criticism of France's military intervention in Chad and Lebanon. M Georges Marchais, the Communist leader, called at the weekend for the withdrawal of French troops from Beirut.

The Government insists that in its relations with the USSR, it is firm on the things that count in the long term. It does not believe in doing things "simply to give pleasure", officials cay.

The French have always had an almost obsessive desire to demonstrate their independance publicly. Where there is a difference of opinion, particularly if the US is involved, the French seem almost to feel obliged to shout their desagreement from the rooftops, rather than protest in private, as others might do, then go along with the majority, perhaps, for the sake of unity.

That very frankness is an asset in France's dealings with the non-aligned countries of the Third World, with which it has better and closer relations than probably any other western nation. That is important to Mitterrand who, like his predecessors, sees France as a "third way" between the two superpowers.

France has established what it describes as "a special relationship" with Algeria, Mexico and India, all leading non-aligned nations, and M Mitterrand will be one of the few Western leaders to take part in Mrs Gandhi's "mini-summit" of non-aligned nations during the UN General Assembly meeting in New York this week

Despite the present economic crisis, the French government has decided to maintain its earlier commitment to double aid to the Third World from 0.35 to 0.7 per cent of gdp within Mitterrand's seven-year term of office.

The area of the government's foreign policy that seems most marked by purely socialist considerations rather than national interests is Central and Latin America. The US was greatly upset and irritated by what it viewed as French interference in its own "backyard" as soon as the Socialists came to power. Within the first year, France had signed a $25m (about £16m) arms deal with the left-wing Sandinista government in Nicaragua, considered by the Americans as potential enemies; Mitterrand had delivered a provenative "message of sidered by the Americans as potential enemies; Mitterrand had delivered a provocative "message of hope for all those fighting for liberty, particularly in Latin America" during a visit to Cancun, Mexico, and a Franco-Mexican declaration had been signed insisting that the left-wing rebels in El Salvador, who were fighting US-backed government forces, be included in any negotiations on Salvador's future.

Since then, however, France is much less active in the area. It still provides civil aid to Nicaragua, but has privately assured Washington there will be no further arms deals. The US is still touchy about any contacts with Central America, however, and made clear that it did not appreciate M Cheysson's visit to Cuba this summer.

The US is happier with French policies in Africa. In opposition, the Socialists had severely criticized France's interventionist role as the "gendarme" of Francophone Africa, and many had wondered what President Mitterrand would do when faced with his first crisis in the area. That crisis has now come in the form of Chad, and after some initial hesitation (justified according to many observers on the ground of the hideous political and military complexity of the task), Mitterrand has shown that he intends to honour in full not only France's treaty obligations, but its wider reponsibilities to former colonies.

The government insists that in Chad, as in Lebanon, it is not interfering in the internal affairs of a country, as its predecessors did, but simply responding to the request of a friendly government to help protect the "unity integrity, and sovereignty" of its country against the invasion of a foreign power.

The government is adamant that it will not get involved in the civil wars in Chad and Lebanon, but more and more French people are wondering how that will be possible and are increasingly questioning the wisdom of being there at all.

The United States and France have so far worked in some harmony in the multinational force, but the rapidly worsening Beirut situation could produce another Franco-American clash.

France sees itself as a bulwark against the threat of dominance of both superpowers. "The US is like an elephant under which one is continually in danger of getting crushed," one presidential aide explained. "In order to maintain our independence we have to battle against the US every day".

But behind all the friction, tensions and frustrations between France and the US, there lies a solid alliance based on a long-standing friendship and respect for common values. For the Americans, France is firm where it counts – on the USSR and defence, and that support is all the more valuable coming from a socialist government. France is also the only western country, other than the US, that has a worldwide strategic view and the capability to do something about it.

The US may have preferred Britain as its world partner, but it is lumbered with prickly, proud France and, faute de mieux, the two countries know that they will have to work together. America may look askance at France's record on the economic front, but it has considerable respect for its analytical abilities, its imagination and its sense of commitment in foreign relations.

The pestilence of pulpit politics

The National Conference of Roman Catholic Priests, which met recently in Birmingham, was attended by 93 clergymen. Since there are more than 5,000 Roman Catholic priests in England and Wales, it cannot be said with any certainty that the assembly was representative. Nevertheless it was vociferous, and the opinions of the vociferous count for much in this world, even if, as one may hope, they count for nothing in the next.

The increasing predominance of conferences in pastoral affairs is part of the process whereby the Roman Catholic Church has been transformed from a prescriptive authority, whose currency is faith, to a debating chamber, dealing in the inflationary coinage of opinion. It is inevitable that such a body should begin to turn away from what matters in religion, the eternal verities, towards what, sub specie aeternitatis, matters least of all – the affairs of this world, which can be the subject of opinion only because they lay outside the domain of faith.

they lay outside the domain of faith.

The National Conference therefore followed in the footsteps of the National Pastoral Congress of 1980, and the Bishops' Conference of England and Wales, in devoting time and energy to secular causes. And Cardinal Hume himself exhorted those present to involve themselves "much more in the institutions of our land, in neighbourhood organizations, trade unions, local government, and Parliament".

We must remember that a certain kind of politics is, for a priest, an easy way out. It is far more agreeable to exalt oneself through compassion for what is anonymous and abstract – the working class, the victims of capitalist oppression, the Third World – than to work humbly in the ways of charity, which obliges us to help those concrete, knowable, and often unlovable individuals whom Providence has placed in our path.

Not only is it more agreeable, it is also more gratifying to the ego. The attention of the world is more readily captured by the man with a cause than by the man who merely attends to his duty. There lies the origin of the modern heresy, which sees true religion in large-scale worldly enterprises, and which exhorts us to fight oppression in Chile, racism in South Africa, or nuclear weapons at home – in short, to perfect the unfinished work of Providence – rather than to save our own souls. It is significant, indeed, that the causes chosen by those in the grip of this heresy are precisely those which further the interests of the world's most militant atheist

Addressing the National Conference, the chaplain to the University of East Anglia argued against the obligatory fast on Friday, on the ground that, because young people did not see the sense of it, this practice was an obstacle to his apostolic work. One would have thought that his duty was to make them see the sense of it. Besides, young people seem to be magnetized by those religious, however eccentric in doctrine or roccoco in performance, which try to control their eating habits. But the chaplain's complaint eloquently captures the apostolic incompetence of a Church dedicated to secular affairs.

Man knows that he is not self-created, and he knows therefore that he owes a debt of gratitude, which can be repaid only by obedience. But obedience to what? Until he answers that question, he lives in a state of anxiety; it is the central tenet of Christian doctrine that the answer lies in faith. With faith a man may at last do with an easy heart what he otherwise does only hesitantly, he may fast and pray. Someone who does not see the sense of such activities is someone who is not yet in a position to believe. Someone who does see the se of them, sees also that they are performed, not only for the sake of others, but also and principally, for the sake of oneself, that one may be reconciled with the power to whom one's life is

The strength of the traditional Roman Catholic Church was two-fold. It offered a definite and authoritative system of answers to life's questions, worked out over centuries of discussion and inquiry, and delivered in a language that spoke directly to the individual heart. It also rehearsed, in sublime ritual, the mystery of man's condition, and the universality of the Church which promised his redemption. This certainty and self-containment were the grounds of its success. For no convert can be won by a religion which compromises with his doubts and hesitations, or which puts secular causes in the place of individual salvation.

No doubt the majority of priests realize that. No doubt they accept that their duty lies towards the individual sinner, for whose sake they must renounce so many of life's pleasures – including the pleasure of trumpeting abroad their virtuous concern for peace and social justice. The true priest works quietly, outside the publicity that gravitates to those of little faith.

The oral instructions offered to his flock by one such priest have recently been recorded and transcribed by a group of his friends. We Believe is a remarkable document, written with warm emotion and lucid intellect. It completely demolishes the specular superstitions with which the faith of Rome has recently been confounded, and presents a doctrine sufficiently complete and sufficiently rich in implications for the individual life, as to make conversion possible. It does, indeed, what all apostolic writing must do, and which so much modern Catholic literature refrains from doing it presents belief to the unbeliever. My thought on closing the book was: if this were true, as it is beautiful, then it would suffice. We Believe is available from Dr A. R. D. Mathias, Peterhouse, Cam-

Washington
Once upon a time there were two clumsy giants who had the power to destroy each other and blow up the world, but were just canny enough to know that this wasn't a very good

Mind you, it wasn't that anybody really planned or thought about the sad end of this story, but that they didn't think at all. But to begin: In the dark of one night, a wayward plane from one of the Asian peninsulas, with 269 civilian passengers aboard, strayed into the territory of one of the giants and was shot into the sea.

Then the giants began to quarrel. Each blamed the other for the tragedy, and agreed on only one thing: that they should have more weapons that could shoot down more planes and distribute them around the world so they could intervene in whatever civil wars were going on at the time.

Also, in those days, they had the means to inflame public opinion by broadcasting and vilifying each other across the world, and this made things even worse.

made things even worse.

For a time, they wouldn't even talk to each other. One giant wouldn't give free passage of ambassadors to talk things over at what was then called, for some obscure reason, the United Nations.

Everybody was playing, for want of a better name, Russian roulette, and a trade war of sorts began. Russian vodka was banned in the state of Maine on the theory that anything Russian was pernicious. Even the rich threatened to deprive themselves of Russian caviar, and some thought that listening to Russian music or going to see Swan Lake was unpatriotic, if not downright subversive.

When Prarda, which is supposed to mean "truth", suggested that the United States was no fit place for the United Nations, the representative of the United States replied in a perfect example of what now passes for modern diplomacy.

If in the judicious determination of the members of the United Nations, he said, they feel that they are not welcome and are not being treated with the hostly consideration that is their due, then the United States strongly encourages such member states seriously to consider removing themselves and the organization from the soil of the United States.

At one stroke, this immediately

Crime Reporter lost the Reagan administration the votes of all employees in all hotels and restaurants on the East Side of Manhattan and compelled the White House to issue an official statement that it had not endorsed its ambassador's suggestion that the United Nations should love New York or leave it.

York or leave it.

Meanwhile, the slanging match between the nuclear giants went on, and the profits of the vodka industry in Peoria, Illinois, went up. So did the bottom line of Aeroflot, the Soviet airline, improve, for the less it could fly into forbidden airports in the West with mostly empty seats, the less money it lost.

There were other consequences of that tragic plane crash. By shooting it down, the Russians assured the passage of a higher US defence budget, probably including the development of the silly MX missile, affronted the leaders of the peace movement in Europe and in the United States, and made it easier for the United States to put its cruise and Pershing 2 nuclear weapons in Britain, West Germany and Italy.

Emerson, wherever he is, undoubtedly thought all this proved his theory of compensations – that every action produces its own reaction. Things refuse to be mismanaged long, Emerson said. Though no checks to a new evil appear, the checks exist and will appear. If the government is cruel, the governor's life is not safe. If you tax too high, the revenue will yield nothing.

Wanting the support of the hungry world, and the doubting citizens of the West, Moscow lost them both. For when the votes in the United Nations were finally taken, they didn't go Moscow's way. On the motion that the United Nations should leave New York, nation after nation, as if directed by Mayor Koch, voted no.

There was another more interesting motion: that the Soviet Union and the United States are in violation of the principles of the United Nations charter, that they are using force and the threat of force to achieve their national ends, and are not even acting in their own interests, let alone the interests of peace in the world.

This passed almost unanimously, with a few abstentions and two objections – from the Soviet and US representatives.

That was in the days when The Job, the Metropolitan Police internal newspaper, was a restrained affair with headlines of demure size and content. Stories of derring do, fund raising and detective brilliance were interspersed with statements from on high.

It was a period which today's Job might describe as "p.n." or pre-Newman. In the year since Sir Kenneth Newman became Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, press conferences have turned into audio-visual presentations and the newspaper into a punchy purveyor of policy.

The distribution of information within the force and to the public has become a key instrument in Sir Kenneth's plans to alter the face of London policing Since last autumn. Scotland Yard has mounted what is probably its most energetic marketing campaign ever.

Dramatic campaigns in the past have been reserved for recruiting, such as "Dull it isn't", showing a police car rocketing through the streets, or crime prevention. Sir Kenneth's arrival has produced what might be seen as a cross between Barnum and Bramshill, the police staff college which he ran

Sir Kenneth, quiet-spoken and somewhat dry, has pulled together the thinking generated at Bramshill, much of it based on studies in the US and other countries, into a philosophy for future policing. To get that philosophy across he has then borrowed the techniques of the high-powered sell within the force and a more subtle approach for the

Sir Kenneth's pitch is aimed at getting cooperation between police and public. He argues that they have struck a bargain, however ignored that bargain may have been in the past: the police, reinvigorated and improving, must have the help of the man in the street through an unspoken "contract".

The message has been transmitted in five press conferences over the past 12 months; previous commissioners usually confined themselves to one or two conferences a year. The conferences are carefully structured, and often include information packs, slides, film and short videos. For instance, the publication of annual crime statistics was taken as an opportunity to defend the Metropolitan Police performance with nearly 20 detailed graphs and new, progressive road studded with signposts written in the lingua franca of modern management. The way forward was first set out by Sir Kenneth to "12 disciples". They passed the message to other officers and in March a meeting of almost every senior officer in London was held at the Hendon training college.

At the same time a 15-minute video was issued for local stations showing Sir Kenneth discussing his ideas. The force newspaper began publishing a supplement called Strategy 83 launching the first issue with the headline "We are where the

FROM RICH TO POOR

In a sensible and rational world capital should flow from rich and well-developed countries to less rich and underdeveloped countries. Wage and other costs should be lower in the underdeveloped countries and the rate of return on capital higher, making investment worthwhile. Throughout the 1960s and 1970s international capital movements conformed to this theoretically logical pattern. Between 1970 and 1980 private lending to the developing countries rose at an average rate of 14 per cent per year in real terms, a remarkably high figure by historical standards.

But the result does not seem to be sensible, rational or logical. Instead of a world in which investors are happy because they have directed their funds to the most profitable areas, there is an international debt crisis which threatens to blight growth prospects for many years to come. It should be emphasized that the central failure was not that capital flows were too heavy. In proportion to their national incomes, the foreign debts of most Latin American countries are lower today than they were in 1914 or the late 1920s. The trouble was that the capital flows of the 1960s and 1970s took the wrong form.

They should have been channelled to private investment in of this correction was the main industries where the underdeveloped countries had obvious cost advantages over their competitors in the advanced nations; instead they have been used to finance budget deficits, and the accompanying payments imbalances, which arose from unprofstable investment by state industries or excessive public sector consumption. They should have been undertaken by lenders not prepared to write off bad capital base for their traditional and still profitable activities in the rich nations. If it had been recognized at the outset that the right instruments for investing in Brazil, Nigeria and the like were bonds and equities, the current rescheduling negotiations would not be so difficult and politically

Indeed, the debt crisis is best interpreted as the consequence of a sharp change in bank behaviour about a year ago. Until 1982 many intermediate and low-income countries had become accustomed to the ready availability of international bank finance. They took it for granted that new loans could be arranged to cover their domestic budgetary excesses. When the banks, acting - to all appearances - as much by herd instinct as by commercial calculation, decided that new loans had to be stopped, the borrowing countries were forced to re-appraise their financial policies quickly and with little warning. The violence reason for the severity of the downturn in world output and trade last year.

If the decline in credit is gradual rather than abrupt, the Major international banks are outlook both for world economic activity and for eventual repaydebts because this erodes the ment of the debts will be much better.

More money is not by itself a solution. The Group of Ten, which refused to be browbeaten by the IMF's appeal for an extra $3,000m support ahead of this week's meeting in Toronto, is probably right not to let borrowing countries recent it as a solution. ing countries regard it as a soft touch. Before further IMF disbursements are made clear signs of a return to more responsible financial policies in debtor nations are needed. Ideally, such policies should encourage capital transfers in future that are more viable and appropriate in character than those seen in the last twenty years.

The two key changes required in the domestic policies of the underdeveloped countries is the elimination of large budget deficits and the creation of a stable framework for overseas private investors. If the IMF succeeds in securing these changes it does deserve further finance from the industrialized world - and, if necessary, substantially more finance. Since IMF loans in present circumstances are largely a replacement for bank loans it is wrong to see inflationary dangers in its activities. Although IMF quota increases are by themselves no answer to the international debt play. The expansion of bank crisis, the IMF must be helped in its task of promoting and tries in the late 1970s was too superintending a system of rapid to be sustained and, orderly, sustainable and profitable capital movements between countries concerned must adjust developed and underdeveloped

Now her chief municipal obfuscation, the opera companies; from charges executioner, Mr Patrick Jenkin, joint board of nominated for entry to Kenwood; from a the Secretary of State for the Environment, is required to frame the charges in detail. Manifesto cliches really are no basis for a major act of administrative reform. Royal commissions sat for a total of six years (Herbert from 1957 to 1960; Redcliffe-Maud from 1966 to 1969) to determine the present shape of metropolitan government. The Prime Minister may be determined on the disappearance of the metropolitan counties, but she should not be deluded about the difficulties and potential costs of the operation. Recent callow statements by ministers suggest that they have no clear view of how the government of the conurbations should be shaped; unless they evince one, and soon, they are heading for an expensive administrative botch.

"Abolition" has a finite ring During the election speechmakers conjured hundreds of millions in savings, the disap-pearance of some 9,000 municipal jobs. Since then these impressive figures have gone from sight, invisible in the consultation papers now beginning to trickle from the departments concerned with services currently provided by counties and the GLC; they will have to reappear in the projected White Paper on abolition if that delayed document is to carry conviction.

During the summer the enthusiasms of the party rallies have had to contend with inescapable issues of public administration: the transfer of superannuation, borough rivalries, precepting powers, managerial calibre in relationship to size of authority, computing capacity, the inheritance of debt.

The Greater London Council Home Office civil servants have appreciable size will only issue and how many other services, Mr Jenkin's bland assurances about reducing bureaucracy sound like whistling in the dark.

> The case against the GLC and the metropolitan counties is woefully easy to make. Yes, people are confused about the responsibilities of the upper-tier authorities; dislike the financial burdens of those adjacent town and county halls. Yes, the current occupants of the six metropolitan county halls and the GLC's offices are objectionable (but county elections would have been only two years away, put the moderate Labour Party West-Yorkshire and Tyneside in the same bag as Mr Kenneth Livingstone or Mr Keva Coombes of Messeyside). Yes, the "strategic" perspective over London and the comurbations has been missing from these councils' work.

How many of the same or agement, strategic planning, parallel criticisms apply with economies of scale. Mr Heath equal force to other public institutions? The water authorities, unsupervised and closet; the shire counties of Avon, Hampshire, Cleveland; sundry district councils: all could be be damned. But leave justice and consistency on one side of this administrative equation. The test in the Government's own terms is whether "abolition" saves public money while promoting efficiency. It is apparent that significant (ie multi-million pound) savings will not follow if the police are transferred to some joint board, or county refuse disposal is given to a the Prime Minister were promisingle borough to manage on nent members of Mr Heath's behalf of others. Savings of an county service, probation, abolition will require the making of "complicated arrangements". As dards officials; from the end of that old, dire mechanism of county subsidies to travelling borough councillors, is once doubling or tripling of bus fares again wheeled on for police, fire in Birmingham and Sheffield; in other words, from a change in the pattern of services.

Removing the podium from which Mr Livingstone makes his eloquent speeches is not enough: some rate or tax-payer will still have to pay the interest on the GLC's debts, somebody - the commuting public? - will have to confront that yawning gap between London Transport's revenues and its costs. Mr Livingstone says that stopping all the "wicked things" his socialist regime has supported out of public money would save an average London family only besides it is patently wrong to 11/2 pence a week; his arithmetic may need checking but his point is undeniable. The exercise of socialism in the county halls is but a marginal cost. Stop it and the park-keepers, police officers and traffic managers have still to be paid.

A decade ago the spirit of the age breathed of corporate manwas beguiled and redrew the map of municipal government. It was the then mere common sense to give the conurbations around Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, Newcastle, Birmingham the status of unified counties. Last week in addressing the Asssociation of Metropolitan Authorities, Mr Jenkin said that common sense now dictated the opposite. He should beware. A prospectus for reform relying on such a fickle guide as "common sense" will lead into the same administrative mistakes as were evidently condoned when he and Government,

This is hardly surprising when one considers that imports of Scotch whisky have been subject to quotas since January, 1983, in addition to long-standing discriminatory price and profit margin controls, import licence and credit restrictions, import deposit as well as import duty, and a series of onerous taxes, the majority of which discriminate against Scotch whisky in favour of other alcoholic drinks.

New approach to parish duties

From the Reverend A. C. Winter Sir, I am concerned by the statement in your recent article, "New approach to parish work" September 23, that most of the men contacted in the survey of the non-supendiary ministry "were unsure of their role in their place of work, and did not see it as the primary locus of their ministry" and that they had difficulties in their relationships with professional clergymen." Not every non-stipendiary minister is licensed in his home parish. Being licensed in that ancient parish which for many years appeared on your back page, I have always thoght that my ministry was to the business area served by that parish. I should like to say that, in trying to carry this out, I have had the greatest encouragement in every way from I am also dismayed at the thought of being lumbered for evermore with the designation of "non-stipendiary minister." Being also an accountant, I may of course be biased in thinking that this description fixes on money for its designation. Is this really the criterion by which the ministry is to

I think the crux of the matter comes from a conception of such a ministry as being there merely to take services, owing to a shortage of clergy. This is surely not the case. In modern times, when this ministry re-emerged in France, those who also had a secular occupation were called priests worker, or worker priests. This title surely puts the emphasis where it belongs, on men called to carry out the mission of the Church in the workeday world. Titles are obviously fraught with hazard, as I learnt recently when a letter in which I described myself (correctly) as "assistant curate" received a reply beginning "My dear young friend." In the twenty seventh year of my ministry this made me feel touched with youth. Yours faithfully.

Courts martial

Sir, Reading Mr D. S. Mindel's letter (September 21) reminded me of a murder case in Burma in 1945. I was the judge advocate of the trial. The prosecuting officer was a former solicitors' articled clerk and the defending officer had no legal experience at all.

Debut of the artificial chromosome

Although it is one of the mportant milestones in genetic research, the next big step opened the way for the new industry of blotechnology with the discovery of biochemical methods for snipping out the DNA molecules, of which genes are made, from a strand in the chromosome of a cell.

That gene is then inserted into an organism like the E. coli bacteria, instructing it to manufacture a specific biochemical segments called the replication that is then collected to form the origin, the telomeres and the basis of a natural drug or other product.

Liège, was born in 1934.

King Leopold III, former King of the Belgians, who died in Brussels on September 25 at the age of 81, was best known for his hotly disputed role in the Second World War, which led to criticism from his British and French allies and a long constitutional crisis in

In the tense days of May, 1940, when, in spite of fierce resistance, the Belgian forces were overwhelmed by the invading Germans, Leopold decided to remain in Belgium. He refused the urgings of his government to join them in taking refuge in France and of Churchill to come to Britain, arguing that his place was with the Belgian forces, of which he was commander-in-chief. On May 27 he made peace overtures to the Germans and, having accepted their demand of unconditional surrender, re-mained their prisoner until the end of the war, most of which he spent in the royal palace at Lacken, outside Brussels.

Subsequent research has suggested that there was a good deal of heroism in this decision to remain with his troops. Liddell Hart argued in 1960 that if Leopold had accepted the demand of Hubert Pierlot, the Prime Minister, that he should leave Belgium on May 25, the Relain forces would have surrendered immediately instead of fighting on with heavy losses until May 27; and that those two days were the vital period which enabled the British Expeditionary Force to escape encirclement and make their way to Dunkirk.

But that was not the way his actions were presented at the time, particularly by the French government, or by Leopold's opponents in Belgium in the years after the war. The French, who had their own precarious position to consider, accused Leopold of doing a deal with the Germans behind the backs of his allies, and this criticism was echoed in London. The Belgian government in exile in France dissociated itself from Leopold's actions: and he was widely accused of collaborating with the Germans during the Occupation.

Claims that Leopold approached the Germans without informing the British or the French have since been shown to be without foundation; and much of the virulence of the attacks can be attributed to the desperate situation of the French, and the Paris government's attempts to maintain morale of its own

But all this came to roost after the war was over and Leopold tried to return. He met with intense hostility. A long period of uncertainty ensued in which Leopold's return was broadly supported by the Roman Catholic right and opposed by the socialists and communists; and the future of the monarchy itself was at stake.

The matter was eventually put to a referendum in 1950, and Leopold's return was supported by 57.88 per cent of the voters. this verdict and, after a wave of strikes and rioting. Leopold decided that he would have to give up the throne. Leopoid was born on Novemb-

Strikes, riots and sabotage occurred in Brussels and Wallonia, and during nine days of turmoil the agitation grew to become a threat of revolution. A march of 100,000 workers to Laeken was organized and 10,000 actually arrived at the gates. Hurried negotiations took place at an all-night sitting in the palace and early on August I an agreement was anounced whereby Prince Baudouin should forthwith exercise the Royal Prerogative until his twenty-first birthday, when he should become King. Immediately the disturbances ceased and a return to work was ordered. On June 21, 1951, Leopold advanced the date of his ication to July 16, just before the National Day, instead of September 7, the Prince's birthday. His advent was de scribed at the time, as he liked to recall, as "the bull's arrival in the china shop", but for twelve years the bull was to remain in possession, breaking some of the more obsolete exhibits but preserving and improving the finer ware. He was appointed Civil Secretary in 1942 and worked in close harmony with his brilliant chief, Douglas Newbold, to whose qualities his own were complementary.

> Newbold's sudden death, in March 1945 resulted in Robertson succeeding him at a time when the political peace of the war years was about to give place to the long wrangle between Britain and Egypt over the revision of the 1936 Treaty and the emancipation, of the Sudan from Condominium rule. The ultimate emergence of the new independent republic was due in large measure to the solid advocacy of Robertson and his Governor-General, Hubert Huddlesson. Partly as a result of Huddleston's retirement Robertson stayed on past the normal retiring age until April 1953 when the new Treaty with Egypt had been signed

Two years after his retirement from the Sudan, Robertson was called back to serve again, this time as Governor-General of the Federation of Nigeria, a post which he held from 1955 until a month after independence: in to Dr Nnamdi Azikiwa. In Nigeria Robertson took over from Sir John Macpherson, who had transformed the political and constitutional scene by recognizing the trend of developments in Africa. To Robertson, with the experience of piloting another large African country to independence, fell the task of consolidsting this groundwork, and leading the country through the five final years of colonial rule. It was a role he performed with distinction. His interest in Nigeria remained after his retirement, and in 1961 he became president of the Britain-Nigeria Association.

After leaving the Sudan. Robertson had been chairman of constitutional commission for British Guiana. In 1961 he acted as commissioner for the Kenya Coastal Strip - one of the knotty problems in the way of Kenya's independence. In the same year he became a director of Barclays Bank DCO and joined the board of the Uganda Company Ltd. He also became chairman of the Commonwealth Institute.

He was created KBE in 1948 and KCMG in 1953 and was advanced GCMG in 1957. He became GCVO in 1956 and a KT in 1965. In 1953 he was elected an honorary fellow of Balliol, his

The operative one could almost say resigned, word in that quotation was will. Whoever wrote it knew that computer scientists can be a cranky lot, and that computing technology and science, particularly at the rich and advanced academic end (where it can be very rich indeed) contains a lot of rampant egos.

All the above conditions were met in Paris where more than 2,500 academics, consultants and corporate technologists (which pleased the organizers as break-even point was 2,100) were faced with an unusually rich diet for their ninth world congress.

two age groups - up to 15 and 15 to 18 inclusive. Entries are individual efforts but because we are keen that schools should become involved, the main prize - two Atari 600XL computers a week, one for each age group - will be presented to the school of the winner's choice. In addition 10 copies of The Times Atlas of World History, five in each age group, will be awarded each week to individual entrants, including the winners of the school computers. Winners of the first competition will be announced next week.

The competition is simple to enter. Cut out the entry form each week and collect the entry tokens from the back page of The Times (you will find it at the foot of The Times Information Service) on the five following publication days - Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Monday and stick them on the form. Those who entered last week should be sure that entries are posted to arrive by first post Friday. Today and every week of the competition there will be five questions on computers to answer with a different theme each week. These will not require the use of a computer

Here is the third of our 12 weekly but may require a certain amount of Classroom Computer competitions for research. All the answers are to be found in young people up to 18 years old. There are works of reference readily available to young people. There is a tie-breaking question to answer which will test the ingenuity and imagination of contestants and enable the panel of judges to decide the winners. Every week is a new contest, so missing one will not spoil your chances. DER MARKET

Hungary puts its software on show

by Paul Walton

There is more to Hungarian businessman Thomas Koltai than meets the eye - he is one of the Eastern Bloc's leading computer designers. He claims that Hungary has taken a world lead in building thinking computers.

This unassuming mathema-tician was in Britain ostensibly to sell the quite ordinary program-ming skills of Hungarian com-puter staff, who work for the Softcoop firm which he runs. He calls his business the "export of

But he revealed that until the beginning of last year, he led a team which is designing one of the world's most advanced intelligent knowledge-based systems which will one day think for itself. It is making progress, despite the involved in the early days of West's high-technology embargo theoretical work on expert syslimiting work to antiquated computers, because of Hungarian skill in the theory as well as the practice of programming.

This work began five years ago at the Hungarian Planning Office. It is generously funded by the socialist administration, which has nonetheless been reluctant in the past to publicise its world lead Similar work is only just beginning in the West, with the so-called Alvey project funding developments as a collaboration between Government and indus-

Koltai says he led a team of theoretical mathematicians putting cylindrical algebra to work as the first step in building an expert system. This theory allows software to be written in the Prolog computer language, which will speed up the production of the Hungarian Five Year plan by instilling an economist's basic techniques in an expert system.

A large intelligent knowledge base being put together by economists, mathematicians and programmers will reduce the time taken planning the socialist ny from years to months.

The Hungarian project, which is known as the "Metadatabase", is part of a much wider coordinated development effort by the Comecon countries, aimed at applying expert systems to all aspects of daily life. Koltai estimates that the Hungarian expert system will be an interac-

University of Budapest "The idea was to build up a and use concepts, as well as data. The real problem was in working out the algorithms which would make the interconnection of these concepts possible.

"What we were trying to do was build a computer system which had its own distinct ecology, in this case a system which could be easily used to handle large amounts of data and sophisti-cated concepts of economists.

work is limited, it has thrown up some of the tools which will make eventual completion of the larger intelligent knowledge based system much easier.

Hungaran programmers used American theories, which were freely circulating around the expert systems community at the time, to write their own computer language, making it easier to put their own ideas into practise. Koltai said that Modular Prolog is the language put together in Hungary, but now finding its way ound the Eastern Bloc.

The Eastern Bloc countries such as the Soviet Union, East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Poland are all doing work on intelligence machines and sensory robots, Koltai said.

This work is hampered only by a lack of skilled staff, something which an expert system could itself improve. A lack of the most up-to-date computer hardware like that used in the West has had little if no effect of advanced, oftware-based research. Work at the Hungarian Planning Office surprisingly began on the ICL System/4, for instance, a computer which is more than ten years old. Despite the fact that it was slow and had little capacity, Modular Prolog was developed on

Implementation of the expert system for economists has recently been transferred from the System/4 to a version of the more modern Honeywell DPS/8, which a Hungarian firm makes under licence from French supplier Cii-

He decided to leave the Metadatabase project at the end of 1981, when the Hungarian authorities announced that strict controls on private businesses would be relaxed in moves to warm up the economy.

'As soon as I heard this, I was is now using what might be on the phone to my friends in the computer business to tell them. said Koltai. "We had wanted to run businesses like this for over 20 years. It was an old and dear

The result was that by January last year Koltai set up Softcoop to offer both computer software and staff for export. Along with other Eastern Block computer staff, he had worked abroad in West Germany or Switzerland in the past, earning much higher salaries and much needed foreign exchange for the country.

As European countries such as West Germany begin to close their borders to these high-tech migrant workers, many are now

We have been established in order to provide a software merchandising service to multiples, department stores, computer shops, CTN's and other retailers.

Aiready, after less than six months in operation, we have secured contracts with a a number of the largest high street chain stores. By the end of this year we shall have come 6-700 outlets up and down the country and through 1984 we shall seek to consolidate and build upon our position as market leader.

Personal computer software is a tremendously exciting market which will develop into a major consumer section over the next lew years. Britain already has a higher ratio of home computers per capita than any other country in the world and, as hardware prices continue to fall, the demand for software rises in leaps and bounds.

The entire computer market, at home and in business, is becoming software led. In order to help us capitalise on the ever increasing opportunities that we face, we now wish to recruit two executives who will play a highly significant role in our future.

Both positions are based in Surrey and demand experience and maturity. Although detailed technical knowledge is not required, a proven interest in computing is essential. Candidates for either position will probably be aged 25+ and be able to demonstrate an outstanding track record in their chosen career.

KEY ACCOUNTS EXECUTIVE circa £12,000 p.a. + car

You will be expected to secure and develop further key accounts business as well as servicing existing customers at head office level. Experience in dealing with multiple accounts is therefore essential, as is the ability to prepare and carry out presentations to senior management committees and buying teams.

Further important responsibilities will include the planning and implementation of stocking plans in multiple retail outlets, sales development and some sales-training. You should have a particularly flexible approach to your work as you will need to maintain excellent communications between the management team, the buying department and the salesforce, as well as major customers.

The successful candidate will add considerable weight to our current sales operation, with strong personal qualities of leadership, determination, tact and

BUYER circa £10,000 p.á. + car

Principle responsibilities will be in the evaluation and selection of new software titles. This will involve preparing for and making recommendations at internal boying meetings as well as with key account customers.

You will need to be capable of grasping the essential information about new software titles quickly and efficiently. Within a very short space of time you will have to become expert in the various home computer systems, the software publishing houses and the software titles themselves.

The successful candidate will be responsible for devising and maintaining records on key account purchasing patterns, stock levels and returns, software publisher turnover and, very importantly, the continual revision of the master stock list.

Therefore, as well as the ability to acquire detailed product knowledge, an enthusiastic approach to administration is essential.

New rules proposed by Land's

By Our Fundacing Seal The 28-man rating count loyd's of London has circulated ils of the proposed guidelines which would mean much stricter appraisal of candidates before they are appointed as active underwriters within the insurance

The proposals are contained in a series of consultative documents which have been circulated to the 4,000 working members of the market as part of the move to modernize the self-regulatory mechanisms at Lloyd's. At a meeting last week, the Lloyd's council agreed on the need for tougher appraisal of underwriting

However, the council members were anxious that any assessment of candidates should not extend to judging the competence of individual underwriters.

Under the guidelines proposed by the Higgins working party which is reviewing the underwriting agency system at Lloyd's, candidates for positions as underwriters, and other key personnel, would be appraised by a special committee of council members who would judge whether the person was suitable. The guidelines als contain recommendations on the pre-ferred underwriting system which allows managing agents to prefer one syndicate over another either in writing risks, allocating expenses, or distributing rimsurance recoveries.

industries has firmly become the receivership that should never have been, the epitone of short-sighted financial considerations overcoming sensible indus-trial considerations.

But now a phoenix is resing from the ashes in the library of Stone International, essentially the electrical engineering division of Sund Plant bought by management from the re-respective from the re-respective from the re-respective from the pack of the Such Pichange as a independent company. If you register the abort-ive attempts to rescue Store-

Platt as a whole under new management - which is what the row was all about it is a pleasing example of economist John Burton's contention that receiver-ships and liquidation should not be confused with wasteful closures of factories and are, in fact, an essential and healthy part of the process of economic evolution.

Burton argues that all industrial policies are a waste of time, whether government is propping up old industries or secondguessing the market on new risks. This is a narrow interpretation of industrial policy which in practice can cover anything from tariffs and regional aid to tax relief for small companies.

Management in trouble

The argument against supporting failed organiza-tions is much stronger. It is too easy for a management, whether private or public sector, to point to the difficulties where central funds can help in the course of re-organization, or catching up on a technology gap. There is sense in the foundry and special steel schemes for instance.

But in most cases, poor performance of larger companies can be laid at the door of management teams. It is the management that is in trouble, rather than simply its

In City mythology, the factories, because it has collapse of Stone Plate, failed to cope with competition or to redeploy its Tecources

> There is only a case for propping up unsuccessful managements or groups of companies where they have special but lop-sided virtues that can be built on.

With hindsight, clear-est case for receivership as an industrial policy was surely British Leyland and its stricken predecessor British Motor Holdings.

Distortions in the system

The trouble with such clear thinking on one nar-row subject, however, is that it runs into an inimical system of laws and business culture built up over decades by other distortions in the system.

The receivership laws, as the Cork Report pointed out, are simply not geared to modern needs. In America, companies like Continental Airlines can carry out reorganizations under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code without the disruption and bankand taxman-oriented priorities involved here.

The Bank of England has evolved an informal British equivalent to Chapter 11 but it is hardly enough.

The occupational pension system has grown up in ways that penalize workers' savings if they lose their jobs. The growth of large companies and the long-term decline of selfemployment added to the channelling of savings through institutions, have built up a climate unusually averse to risk. Only as wider-ranging changes are made to alter this climate will it be sensible to save all those millions on aid and subsidies and allow the State to withdraw to the sidelines.

EXCHANGE RATE

Nobody - except the general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party - could wish to be in the Governor of Hongkong's shoes at the moment. Some reassuring noises, backed more substantially by a sharp three-point rise in interest rates. injected a semblance of stability into the colony's affairs yesterday but the illusion will prove hard to maiotain.

Under the pressure of a probable return to Chinese rule the colony is awakening rudely from the dream world of recent years. For too long business continued as though China and "unequal" treaties did not exist. But now the penalty is being

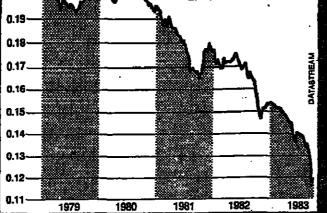

So high could the cost be, in fact, that both Hong and local Chinese alike must comtemplate the possibility of effective incorporation into the People's Republic being brought forward from the current date of 14 years hence.

The overriding consideration now is that deep and prolonged uncertainty, constant pressure on the Hongkondollar from both currency flights and disposals of shares, accompanied by the departure of skilled workers, could corrode the colony's fundamentally healthy economy to the extent that it may be worth little to anybody.

These fears are closer to home than the extreme nervousness of the markets - partly and rightly put down to wild speculation -would suggest. A weaker currency will combine unhappily with inflation already forecast at 16 per cent to push up prices.

The gain in competitiveness in States and West Germany will be offset by questions about the reliability of supply and the willingness of Hongkong businessmen to invest their foreign earnings in the colony.

Nevertheless, there are some measures the Government can take in the short-term to reduce the panic. It can try to correct the outstanding fact that the Hong-kong dollar is backed by nothing by allowing the note issuing banks to buy foreign currencies for the currency reserve.

It can also persuade investors in the vital property companies that they will not be expropriated lock, stock and harrel tomorrow. But the respite is likely to be only temporary. How can this state of affairs continue for 14 years?

Exchange & Mart, the weekly advertising periodical, has once again proved the mainstay for its owners, Link House Publications. its huge profits of £7.4m, helped by a cover price and advertising rate increase, propped up losses from magazine and books and the group's communications interest which provided services to Prestel viewdata customers but closed this year. The books and magazine divisions should return to profit by December. This is almost entirely due to cut backs and changes internally.

Even so, a 23 per cent increase in group pretax profits in the half year to last December has slowed to a 13 per cent rise for the whole which is covered 1.8 times by attributable profit. With a strong cash flow business like Exchange & Mart Link has not had trouble increasing the dividend payments sione it was first made public in 1979 But it now has to make

Cons. Gold

Recent profits notwithstanding, Consolidated Gold Fields has experienced a run of bad luck epitomized by yesterday's news that talks with Ingersoll Rand to sell Skytop Brewster have folded.

Other negotiations with several American and other companies, all outside the mining industry, are under way, but in the present state of the oil industry, which Skytop supplies, it would seem prudent to allow Gold Fields the full two years and £87m it set aside for the disposal of this unfortunate property.

No doubt the management will eventually find someone willing to pay the price - the talks with Ingersoll foundered on the shares of sales of inventories and leasing the Conroe plant - but the episode lingers as a reminder of Gold Field's attempts to expand outside its normal busines

At the time the move seemed reasonable enough, and one cannot rule out the possibility of some supporter of the new and more restricted strategy suffering the same fate as did Mr David Lloyd-Jacob.

The question remains whether the three legs of Gold Fields of South Africa, Amey Roadstone (surely a departure from the mainstream vindicated by its and industrial interests is the right

However, the furniture and textiles group was again held back by continuing losses at Nathan Furniture, the cabinet company which has been a drain on resources since it was acquired in 1981. Losses at Nathan were virtually halved over the year to £764,000 after drastic rationalization which prompted the closure of the Worcester factory (causing a £74,000 extraordinary loss).

More than 70 products were also introduced during the year and 80 taken out of production at Nathan. This should boost sales this year, but probably not enough to bring the division back to profit in the forseeable future.

Elsewhere, the group had fared better, with the K. Raymakers curtain velvet weaving busness increasing its continuation to profits from £677,00 to £751,00. The investment of £500,000 in new facilities at Raymakers will further improve profits in the division by adding 16 per cent to capacity in a full year.

Parker Knoll furniture division, which specializes in the manufacture of upholstery, also improved trading profits from £1.4m to £1.7m, and Parker Knoll Textiles, the fabrics business, increased trading profits from £1.2m to £1.3m.

The overall trading climate was helped last autumn by an increase in consumer demand which continued into 1983. But during the last quarter of the financial year some hesitancy crept into the market and the group now finds it difficult to predict the outcome

Lower interest rates would help. So to, would a switch in the emphasis of consumer demend away from videos and Continental holidays towards upmarket furniture of the kind produced by Parker Knoll.

An extract from the Chairman's statement.

"In the year under review, the pre-tax profits of the Group amounted to £1,616,000, as compared with £1,735,000 the previous year, a decrease of 7%. A total dividend for the year of 10 0p (1982) 9.35p) is proposed, and this would be 3.5 times covered by after tax

The turnover both of Ricardo and of Cussons increased during the year, and as a result we received an improved contribution to Group profit from our subsidiary Company We had, however, planned for a somewhat higher level of contract engineering work at Ricardo than we finally achieved, and this reduced the profit of the parent Company Despite the lower external workload, we increased expenditure on our own miernally-hunded research work, the results of which we are convinced will be of considerable value to the Company in enhancing its prospects of altracting an increased volume of contract work in the future

We believe that we have every prospect of achie ring a safactory workload both at Ricardo and at Cussons in the year

Britain's exporters, so long the target of exhortation, have been trebly hit by North Sea oil, the high pound and the world slump. Now we are looking to exporters again to sustain recovery. In the first of a 3 part series on the trials and tribulations of a special breed, JOHN LAWLESS profiles John Packer of Reid & Taylor.

As the guests depart, the bells of St Lawrence Jewry will peel – and the latest sales drive by a company, which employs only 100 workers and has only 30 ustomers, will come to an end. Mr Packer is the man behind his export extravaganza. The only thing more extraordinary than the occasion itself is the fact that he is managing director of a company in a sector of British industry that has been enguised by cheap imports and renowned for its lack of imaginative marketing: the textile trade.

"And the publicity, of course, doesn't hurt," says Mr Packer, "Japanese television will be filming the whole event for a twohour show, and we did a programme previously with Russell Harty.

"How do you cost out a two hour programme? £2m? £3m? £4m? I have no idea - but if you added up all the coverage we receive in the media around the world, it must be the cheapest advertising budget ever."

Reid & Taylor's customers have a direct interest in what is on display. "I visit most of them three times a year," Mr Packer says, "travelling for three months out of every 12 and always virtually on the same dates each year. I can tell when I'm going to be, say in Japan within two days every year for the next 10 years.

The great disappointment is that Reid & Taylor has never cracked the US market. "We are destroyed by a tariff of 42 ½ per cent in a country where textile makers of our quality are non-existent." Mr Packer says.

His lobbying of governments is, of course, highly unusual. "Jim Callaghan said he would see what he could do when he was Prime Minister. I made up a length of cloth with the initials J.C. woven

"We also made another length of cloth for his opposite number in the White House, Mr Jimmy Carter. "I don't know whether he was moved to act, but I believe the tariff came down from 47 1/2 per cent a little while later.

The company's success is based entirely on the belief that even if the customer cares desperately about the quality, it matters not a fig unless he or she demands to feel the width - by name.

Few other textile companies have ever managed to leapfrog wholesalers and tailors to impose such an awareness of the product on their ultimate customers. That is why Reid & Taylor can claim only 30 direct customers all in the

Mr Packer's business-style is dedicated to making a purchase a pleasure, though he is very traditional about how business should be done. The fact that it is now possible to buy a £470 suit made of Reid & Taylor cloth off-the-peg empha-sizes how the Langholm mill moves with tastes and times. Its looms also make styles of cloth - incorporating fibres such as mink, ermine, chinchilla, sable or just "common or garden cashmere" into the finest Merino wools - to catch the eye of the top men who often want what are called 'matched separates"

Women now purchase 10 per cent of Reid & Taylor's cloth, and that figure is growing. But a drive for further revenue growth has led to the company starting to trade on the cachet of its name, a tactic exploited by French fashion houses, but rarely done here. It is licensing accessory-makers to produce under the Reid & Taylor

MARKET REPORT by Michael Clark

BP drains equity cash ACCOUNT DAYS: Dealings began, Sept 19, Dealings end, Sept 30. Contango Day, Oct 3. Settlement Day, Oct 10.

But for those dealers suffering a bad bout of indigestion, it must have looked a different picture altogether. No sooner had they waived Government's sale of £550m-worth of shares in BP a prosperous and fond farewell than raising exercise.

The Government broker has used the market's percent strength to announce another £1,000m of short tap Treasury 974 per cent convertible 1988 at a minimum tender price of £96.50.

Investors will pay £30 down, with the remainder due by December 5.

The Bank of England was again in no rush to cut interest rates. At

AMERICA'S CUP: AUSTRALIA TRY TO MAKE WAVES

Liberty rides storm of protest but avoids ballast controversy

Newport, Rhode Island The Australian threat to lodge a protest against the American yacht, Liberty, at the start of the yacm, Liberty, at the start of the final decider yesterday for the America's Cup, was forestalled late on Sunday afternoon, when the defending skipper, Dennist Conner, decided against making a last one, decided against making a last one. last-minute ballast change to the Valentijn-designed 12-metre. His decision was made, not because of the threat made on Saturday by Alan Bond to call on the international jury to rule on whether the American 12 can hold three different rating certificates at one time, but because a late weather forecast predicted a continuation of this final encoun-

The burgundy red yacht sat in a shed at Cove Haven Marina all day Sunday with her designer, crew members, the Australian representative, Ben Lexcen and the American measurer, Mark Vinbury on hand to oversee the changes, before the decision was made to keep the yacht in its light

Few observers in Newport disagree with Bond's argument on a moral standpoint, for the head of the Australian syndicate was quite correct when he said on Saturday that at no other regatts in the world would a yacht be allowed to change her rating certificate between races. Unfortunately, the America's Cup is no ordinary regatta, and when the rules are written by a defending eacht club, they are not necessarily written to favour a challenger.

Bob McCullough, the chairman of the New York Yacht Club America's Cup committee, which runs theses races, said at the weekend that changes to ballast have always been legal during a cur competition, even when a race is postponed, and that the conditions governing this current series had been agreed and signed by boty competitors.

When designing Liberty, it is now apparent that Johan Valenijn exploited the rules governing 12-metre yachts, which allow a greater sail area to be carried if ballast is removed. John Marshall, a member of Liberty's efterguard, said on Sunday that the American design was unique, because displacement and waterline length, the two governing factors, remained in proportion to each other when a change to the This meant that when the crew decided to change Liberty to either its light, medium or heavy mode, no penalty is incurred

Wobbly German defence raises Watford's hopes

Of the major British teams which venture into Europe this week in the second leg of the first round in the three European club tournaments, Watford's task, with the possible exception of Manchester United's, must seem the hardest. They are hoping to wipe out the 3-1 defeat inflicted on them in Kaiserslautern, bombing away with their long balls against a defence which, despite the gigantic presence of Briegel proved. gigantic presence of Briegel proved not impregnable; and hoping that

Three days after forcing open Liverpool's steel doors, Manchester United stust this evening lift an iron curtain. They are unbeated this season and have lost at home only each to forcing Barnes will again worry it.

It gave away three goals last Saturday at Offenbach. It is unlikely that the dangerous Swedish centreforward Nilsson, who scored two of inheaten this season and have lost at home only eace to foreign opposition in the last 17 years.

The United manager, Ron Atkinson, sees his task as clearly as he can see his attractive capital from the roof of the team's hotel. "No matter where we go," he said, "we won't find a harder game than the one we're playing here".

Yet, to a large extent, that is Yet, to a large extent, that is United's own doing. In the first leg a fortnight ago, they were given the freedon of their own half as well as necessary of the possession. In falling to make use of that, they succeeded only in becoming impatient and, but for Wilkins's penalty in the final minute, would have paid even more

From Stuart Jones Football Correspondent, Prague

"It is important that we are more sensible this time", Atkinson went on. "That does not mean we will sit lack with eight defenders, nor does that mean we will slow down our build-up. We plan to attack as usual, but we must keep faith in that strategy until the final minute.

After Saturday's victory over Liverpool, United's manager had no need to lift his players. Once they had all reported fit, he merely selected the same 11 (only Whiteside, who was suspended, missed the first leg) and asked them to be "brave enough to carry the to be brave enough to carry the same belief, drive and purpose out on the pitch against Dukla."

Those words were simed directly at his international representative. He feels that "it is time they as the experise that they have gained at club and country level in a game that is so important to us". Atkinsou admitted that he would trade "not beating Liverpool last Saturday for a Financial rewards are not the only reason, though they are rich enough. Should United go on to claim the trophy itself, they would expect to receive a total of some £500,000, mostly from their buge gates at Old Trafford. That is equivalent to the rewards for winning the FA Cup.

Success on the continent streng-thens interest at home. "If we can get through here and the next round," Atkinson added, "then our supporters will have someting to look forward to in March and perhaps beyond. Besides, European competitions need the hig clubs such as Real Medrid, Bayern Manich and Alax to survive and give them and Ajax to survive and give them some of the glamour and the glitter

He himself is confident of the outcome. The moment Wilkins scored, he felt the balance of the whole tie shift significantly back in United's direction. Maybe, but they will need all the discipline and has returned to the attack, and the 18-year-old Van Basten has estab-lished himself as one of the most exciting forwards in Europe.

● Watford must make two changes for their UEFA Cup match with Kalserlantern at Vicarage Road tomorrow. Neither George Reilly nor their new signing, Sinaott, who made his debut in Saturday's 3-2 defeat by Totteaham, are eligible. Gilligan, who played in the first leg, which the Germans won 3-1, will again deputise in attack for Reilly. Replacing Sinnott will not be so straightforward for the managaer Graham Taylor. His first choice will be to more Jackett to left back and be to move Jackett to left back and bring Franklin in at centre back. But Franklin will need a test on a calf strain, and Bolton is standing by.

No wonder Ajax were able to transfer their young international striker Kieft to Pisa, and even to let Cruyff go to Feyenoord, when his torward Nisson, who scored two of Kaiserslautern's goals in the first leg of the UEFA Cup te will see quite as many chances. By Pat Butcher As if the race itself were not enough, the repercussions of Sunday's London to Brighton road race continue. Mike Farrell, secrelary of the Amateur Athletic Association, is writing to the organizers for a full report on the six South African entrants who gatecrashed the 53-mile race. The South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee (SANROC) and the Anti-Apartheid Movement are incensed over what they feel is a bad ruling by the International Amateur Athletic Federation, the world governing body, which let other South Africans into the race, including the winner. Bruce For-An executive committee meeting of the Anti-Apartheid Movement was last night discussing whether to write to the Minister of Sport, And Sam Ramsamy of Sanroc said yesterday: "There has been a very clear violation of the IAAF laws." The six unofficial entrants make the situation even worse, but as Farrell points out, no one can stop Farrell points out, no one can stop people running in a race on the open highway. "We've looked at this before with regard to people who dress up as clowns to run marathons. There's nothing legally we can do. In fact, if you try to stop them you can be summonsed for assault."

RUGBY UNION

Lord outlines plans for tournaments and change in laws

By David Hands, Rugby Correspondent

David Lord, the Australian who months. The first begins on January plans to launch professional rugby union in this country on January 14, Wales at Stamford Bridge, Chicken June 1 followed to the followed to the country of the coun union in this country on January 14, made a breezy, confident appearance before a sceptical British press gathering in London yesterday, presenting the face of a man with all the aces up his sleeve. Since he is not prepared to disclose the names of his spoasors, however, only time will tell whether the aces turn out to be jokers. Mr Lord freely admits be jokers. Mr Lord freely admits be jokers. Mr Lord freely admits that he will do anything to quash the scepticism until he is ready.

There is little doubt that the climate is right for a scheme such as Mr Lord's. The generation gap between players and administrators was never so marked, not so much in terms of age as in attitude. On the one hand, Ron Jacobs, president of the Rugby Union, talks of dealing with honoural te men when asking Fneland players to sign a declarwith honoural to men when asking England players to sign a declaration of intent - from which at least one leading administrator has disassociated himself. On the other, player-power has been increasing in this country and in Australasia, and the attitude of many leading players is that if the game can take such large profits from the efforts of the players, surely they are entitled to players, surely they are entitled to some of it, in the form of "perks" if not direct payment. The waters are further muddled when a leading player of one country - Robert Paparemborde -suggested in a French newspaper that the leading players of other countries are involved in money-making rackets.

Paparemborde stressed that his criticisms were not of the players but of the system which allowed such "abuses" to grow. Wheeler makes the point that what was done was a cortesion of what was done was an extension of what regularly happens on any major tour when a players' pool exists.

Considering the accusations which have, from time to time, been levelled at the French from this side of the Channel, there may be an element of tit-for-tat in Paparem-borde's story, but Wheeler is contacting his socilcitors for advice. It does make the point however, It does make the point however, that players, the product of their age, may look for a cushion in their rugby which older players, now administrators, never thought of Into such a disaffected atmosphere drops Mr Lord with a plan which is never thought of the plantistic cives one thing

Two of the players whose omission or retirement caused England a degree of heartnehe last season, Mike Slemen and Phil Blakeway, were included yesterday in a training squad of 34 which will meet at Stourbridge on October 3. Slemen, aged 32, the Liverpool left wing who was not picked for the trial par for the interactional season in nor for the international season in 1982-83 after winning 29 caps, was never satisfactorily replaced. Blake-way, the Gloucester tight head prop, retired from rugby altogether and will face a stern tassle with Gary

In other respects the squad is based very largely on last season's selections, with the exceptions of the back row players, Dean Richards of back row players, Dean Richards of Leicester and Paul Simpson of Bath, Both have been in consistently good form for their clubs though I imagine that Simpson is chosen as a flanker rather than No 8, where he has been playing for Bath. There are already three No 8a in the squad, Richards, John Scott and Bob Hesford.

In the absence through injury of Nigel Melville, the scrum halves are Steve Smith and Nick Younga, the game, match fees scaled to a win, lose or draw system during the following 48 hours, and a further 19,000 on completion of the tournament That makes an aggregate over seven tournaments of £84,000, not including bonus payments. The cash for each squad of 31 (26 players, manager, coach, doctor, physiotherapist and baggage man) comes from two major sponsors and eight minor sponsors and is closely linked with television coverage. Crowds, Mr Lord claims, are not vital to the funding of the scheme. He claims, instead, to have organized 80 hours of international television coverage, the money from which - with that from the sponsors will be paid into a trust fund, the signatories to which include two players from each country involved. The players themselves are likely to form a professional association and would also have a say in the rules under which games would be Mr Lord envisages a ban of defending backs standing up flat on the advantage line, changes to the tackle laws, and the prevention of

In summary, Mr Lord plans seven tournaments spaced over 25 and because there is no strength in depth there. Any player who wishes to opt out of his initial contract is free to do so. More than that Mr Lord will not say. The success of the whole project, in the long term, is still anyone's guess - which leaves us roughly where we came in. and because there is no strength in

Then Miss Wood was pulled out of the world championships for disciplinary reasons, (for no serious misdemeanor, one should add), which may leave a should about, which may leave a tinge of dissanisfaction in some judges' minds; and finally Miss Jackson moved from Nottingham, where wh had been trained by David Lunn, to Richmond, where she comes under the formidable aces of Arnold Gerschwiler. Lunn did well by Miss Jackson, but his ice dance background was bound to limit his horizons. Gerschwiler, on the other hand, is a man of control of the other hand, is a man of

come up as it does cross Manila Canning Town. Bay but yesterday when the sun fell on Lord's Cricket Ground 'crost the way from Frank' Cedeno's hotel room it warmed the heart of the little Filipino flyweight. The warmth did not envelope him the way it does in the streets of Manila but he rubbed his hands with the kind of satisfaction the secretary of the MCC might feel on seeing the sun on a big match day

From the moment he arrived in rain 12 days ago to finish off his preparation for his world title bout with Charlie Magri. Cedeno has been praying for the sun. It makes him feel a different man His manager, Jesse Abrea, said two days ago: "If the sun comes out we will take the title: if it does not then it may not be so good."

The sunshine lifted some of the the two men after seeing, courtesy of the BBC, a video of Magri taking the world title from Eleoncio Mercedes. "He is a big puncher." Mr Abrea said, "a fighter, not a boxer. We will have a hard time. If Cedeno can take the punches we will win. We heard that Magri has a glass chin ut he took all the punches from Mercedes. They may have given Magri exercises for the jaw. Then he added: "But we must wait till tomorrow to see if the sun comes

The storm will no doubt break quite early around Cedeno's ears this evening at Wembley. Margi knows that Cedeno is a boxer without a knockout punch and he is unlikely to give the challenger enough room to show his skills Magri, who has been training with Ray Cattouse. 2st heavier than is ready to set off his big attacks. said it will be at 11. It will give Cedeno time for a meal. The Laud British afternoon weigh in would have deprived Cedeno of his meal. We must have our rice, Mr Abrea said. It would have been cruel to starve a Filipino of the sun and rice as well.

The pressure on Magri to meet his rival, Keith Wallace, will grow if the Liverpudlian beats Antoine Montero, of France, in a European title bout at Alexander Pavilion on November 2. Wallace's manager Frank Warnen, is offering £60,000 to Magri. But Barrett, who would also like to stage the bout, which is the flyweight equivalent of the Bugner-Bruno show, said yester-day: "It is time I gave 60,000 reasons why Magri should not fight allace. I am paying Magri substantially more than that for fighting Cedeno. Magri versus Wallace is a much hotter fight."

Warren countered with a blow to the top end of the scale. I defy Mike Barrett to show me a contract for the Bruno and Bugner fight. Bugner says he knows nothing about it I certainly don't and I am Bugner's manager. The board confirmed it today. It is a cheap publicity stunt." There's no show like boxing business.

Lendl in the money

San Francisco, (Reuter) - Ivan Lendl beat John McEnroe 3-6, 7-6, 6-4 to win the $265,000 (£182,000) TransAmerica Open champion-ships. Lendl made a second set comeback when McEnroe appeared to lose his winning touch, "I did not play well enough at the end and he got stronger, McEnroe said afterwards.

It was Lendi's 65th win of the year against 13 losses. It added $40,000 (£27,500) to his bank account, and he has already won $1,144,878 (£789,000) in prize money this year. McEnroe, as runner up, received $20,000.

McEnroe lost only three points on his three service sames and when he his three service games and when he broke Lendl's serve in the sixth game to go 4-2 up, he looked unbeatable.

McEnroe looked even more confident after the first game of the second set, when he broke Lendi for the second time and went into a 2-0 lead. The match went to a tie-breaker which Lendi finally won 7-4 with a service return down the line. In the seventh game of the third set, McEmoe was broken yet again with another Lendl service return. Lendl won the match, holding srvice to love and gaining the winning point by slamming the ball nast McFingre McFingre subrated

Begum tells of village massacre

From Michael Hamlyn Karachi

Begum Nusrat Bhutto, widow of the executed former Prime Minister, Mr Zulfikar Ali Bhutto. drew attention yesterday to an alleged massacre committed by Pakistani security forces in a village 250 miles north of here.

According to Mrs Bhutto, president of the outlawed Pakisian People's Party (her husband's old party), the paramilitary police at Khairpur Nathan Shah in the Dadu district, opened fire on busloads of mourners gathering to protest at the death of a demonstrator. A statement by Mrs Bhutto, issued yesterday in Karachi, declared that "the name of humanity has been stained" in Pakistan.

Her statement was distributed at a meeting addressed by Maulana Shah Nurrani, head of the Jamiat Uleme Party, a religious right-wing group which supports the Movement for the Restoration of Democracy, though it does not belong to it. The Maulana said 45 people had been killed at Khairpur Nathan Shah when the security forces opened fire with machine-guns on September 12.

According to Mrs Bhutto's statement, a curiew was imposed immediately on the village, and to keep details of the massacre from getting out.

Maulana Nurrani was held at the Karchi Press Club and was called to protest against the continuing censorship of the Pakistani press. Newspapers in Pakistan are instructed to follow guidelines laid down by the arthorities. Those that fail to do so suffer prepublication censorship, withdrawal of state advertising and loss of newsprint supplies. Three Sind newspapers are currently subject to pre-censorship: two Sindi language and one Urdu. Mrs Bhutto, who is in France where she is said to be seriously ill with cancer, urged Pakistanis to support a strike called for September 28 and 29, when local elections are to be held in the Punjab and Sind. The Movement for the Restoration of Democracy has called for a boycott of the

The papers.

The massed breakout of Pro-visional IRA prisoners from the Maze prison draws comment from many of today's national newspapers.

The Daily Express which comments that "the hard-pressed security forces have been betrayed". security lotes have been occupied.

says: "A breakont of this size, from a jail of this kind, involving killers of this nature - with guns too, if you please - fairly screams - 'mcompetence' on the part of the authorities.

"Mr Nick Scott, the junior Northern Ireland minister responsible for prisons, has said it is too early to talk about his resignation. Perhaps. But it isn't too early to think about it."
The Daily Star insists that Mr Scott "should resign immediately. It is the only action he can take after a breakout of this appalling magnitude."

The paper adds that Mr James Prior, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, should consider going too, "and take some of the prison's most senior and responsible officials with him", if the inquiry omiciais with him, if the indutry into the escape reveals corruption, or slack security at the prison.

Looking to the longer view, Daily Mirror comments: "No doubt somebody was at fault and no doubt somebody will be blamed – though not necessarily the same necessarily." not necessarily the same person. But that won't mend the damage.

Recent successed against the IRA have flowed from the readiness of Irish informers to betray their commades to the police in order to save their own skins.

How many will be willing to talk in future without the confidence that the Maze can hold those who re convicted?" The paper adds: "Now the legend of the Great Escape is born.

Sentimental Irish-Americans who don't like guns in New York and Boston will pay for more to be fired in Belfast and Derry."
